

EAGLE

CUTAWAYS INDEX

GARY JAMES

Introduction

The centrepiece of The Eagle was, both literally and figuratively to begin with, the 'cutaways,' used to explain the internal workings of various mechanical devices. Trains, ships, buses, cars, massive constructions projects—there was no subject matter too complex for the writers and artists of the comic to tackle in this form.

An index of this sort has been talked of for as long as I can remember, and – because nobody has done so yet – I set out to tackle as much as I could. There are many gaps, and many things which require a specialist eye, but as a starting point... It isn't terrible.

The process of getting all of this together, however, has been quite terrible. What started as something that I could pull from The Database and present in a dedicated little piece, ballooned into searching through my collection to add in as much detail as possible. Much of the information here has come from others, and I thank them for their patience.

If there is one thing that coming back to this has shown me, is that the talents of L. Ashwell Wood, in particular, are vastly underplayed in the story of The Eagle. Yes, Dan Dare deserves a special place in readers hearts, but Wood's cutaways were far more fascinating to pore over than the spacecraft in that strip.

Feel free to share this document. Make it known to train, plane and car enthusiasts for their input. Add to the knowledge contained within and distribute your own editions, taking credit for any alterations. I am, quite thankfully, done with this for the time being, and hope that some time not spent staring at an immense list might be good for my eyesight.

Please don't force me to compile more of these.

Gary James.

AFTERWORD

This is where I ask everyone to contribute what knowledge they have, not only to this, but to whatever they can. This work is but a small pebble thrown into a pond, and I hope to see its ripples expand.

A challenge, if you will.

Go and be amazing.
